Dear James,

I hope you are well.

I am embarrassed to see that it was last August that you wrote to me and that I am only now replying to your very kind letter. I can only plead that I wanted to be the bearer of some news, and it has taken a while for me to make any progress with the idea of a film.

As we discussed, the essential point is to find the right home for what will be a rather unusual film (which is what makes it interesting, but also hard to place). The good news is that a few weeks ago the BBC launched a new digital TV channel BBC Four, which has a very interesting wide cultural remit (its strap line is "Everyone needs a place to think"). I have spoken to them about the project, and they are intrigued enough to want to know more. So I am about to sit down to write a short proposal, and I hope to arrange a "pitch" meeting some time in the next few weeks. There are obviously no guarantees that they will want to take things further, but at least something is happening at last!

It would be useful to have a quick phone conversation just to get up to date with what you are doing these days. Would you like to suggest a number and time when it would be convenient to call?

Best wishes,

David
