PS,

Had a pleasant Sunday afternoon taking Vanessa Carver to the Museum of History and Industry to see the Women's Votes, Women's Voices exhibit commemorating 100 years of women's suffrage. Like most MOHAI shows it was pretty good. Jacqueline was suppose to go with us but opted to spend the afternoon with her boyfriend instead.

I know you must be busy getting the Lady Gaga lectures ready for Fall term but how about you and I getting together before you have completely forgotten all about your trip? I know personally how quickly the smoke of memories blows away and would like to hear about Spain and Morocco before it is the long-lost, distant past.

Anyway, look for a couple-of-hour slot for coffee; okay?
